

"We believe that housing is a human right. We also recognize that organizations like the National Realtors Association are negatively impacting our communities by lobbying against the eviction moratorium." — Tyeisha Grier, Kent County Organizer/Community Policy Institute Co-Coordinator of Network Delaware

"Our National Day of Action across this country is a clear clarion call for economic and social justice. We are here today to tell corporate bosses loud and clear that we will not stop fighting for what we need and deserve. We will not stop demanding that money earmarked for our families and communities land on target and not in the pockets of you or your shareholders. Hear us loud and clear. Our strength is that we stand on the moral high ground - none of which belongs to you demonstrated by your greedy lobbying efforts." — Cherie Mortice, Member Leader of Iowa Citizens for Community Improvement Action Fund

"Among those elected to represent the people of Idaho, Senator Crapo has been taking money hand over fist from big Pharma to undercut the health and wellbeing of Idahoans to line his pockets in exchange for gutting government negotiations to lower prescription medication pricing that is leaving millions of people across this country without access to life saving medications—medications that cost pennies to produce, subsidized by taxpayers and leaving them subject to illness and death just to bolster corporate profit." — Adrienne Evans, Director of United Vision for Idaho

"In the fight to Build Back Better, we fight for climate justice. While we work to create a society that moves toward carbon neutrality and renewable energy, we cannot allow corporations like Ajax Paving Industries to continue to commit climate injustice against our communities." — Ken Whittaker, Executive Director of Michigan United

"The reconciliation bill is so important to families like mine. My children are autistic and we rely on access to home and community based services every day. This care keeps my children from institutionalization, giving them a life with dignity at home and with friends. Blue Cross Blue Shield and other corporations are not just being greedy but they are being ableist by lobbying against this plan that will give folks with disabilities access to an equal quality of life." — Marcella Termini, young mother and Manchester resident, Rights and Democracy New Hampshire

"West Virginians stand to gain much needed jobs, child and eldercare, and housing from Build Back Better. We can't let greedy corporations, as outlined in this report, derail what is the biggest social effort since the original New Deal! Senator Manchin needs to

'seal the deal' and unrig the system to make life better for average West Virginians and the whole nation." — Gary Zuckett, Executive Director of WV Citizen Action

"I was really angry when I found out that Hoosier company Anthem, alongside so many other big businesses, is trying to block legislation which would help my family afford health care. Whether we come from rural Indiana or a big city, all of us should be able to prevent, treat or recover from illness without going bankrupt. Nearly 20% of Hoosiers, including my family, have medical debt. Care can't wait - we need our leaders to stand up to corporate donors now." — Michelle Higgs, resident of Unionville, IN and leader with Hoosier Action

"Our country has an historic opportunity to buck corporate greed and put people over profits in a time when we need it most. New York City is home to so many corporate headquarters, and we'll continue to show up, make noise, and demand they keep their hands off of the Build Back Better plan. The livelihood of our country depends on it." — Jawanza Williams, Director of Organizing of VOCAL-NY

"We can't call the U.S. the greatest democracy in the world if our legislators allow a handful of corporations to derail the critical and wildly popular provisions in the Build Back Better package. These companies are lining politicians' pockets in hopes of securing a future of extreme inequality and climate catastrophe. It's time for lawmakers to grow spines and show us who they work for: the people, not massive corporations. And if Long Island's current representatives won't do what's right, we'll find candidates who will." — Lisa Tyson, Director of the Long Island Progressive Coalition
